b) In the case of the commoner diseases - cholera, small-pox, plague etc., - the patel himself would ordinarily be able to identify the disease. As regards Enteric fever, Diphtheria and scarlet fever, we cannot expect "simple instructions to be of much use. Diphtheria and scarlet fever are of very rare occurrence in India and their correct diagnosis involves Bacteriological Examination. The only course is for the patel to report all suspicious diseases to the Amildar who would communicate the report to the District Sanitary Officer for necessary inspection. If on examination the disease is found to be Enteric, Diphtheria or scarlet fever, a report of the kind required may be sent to the Health Officer, Civil and Military Station.
